

The Basic Bitch Essay Outline

- Introduction
 - Creative
 - Scenario (set the scene with a narrative to appeal to the emotions of your reader)
 - Transition (don't just jump from narrative to concrete details)
 - Thesis (remember to use words from the prompt in your thesis)
 - Analytical
 - Hook/Attention grabber
 - Introductory sentence to topic 1 (talk about the topic for body paragraph 1)
 - Introductory sentence to topic 2 (talk about the topic for body paragraph 2)
 - Introductory sentence to topic 3 (talk about the topic for body paragraph 3)
 - Use as many as you need!
 - Thesis (remember to use words from the prompt in your thesis)
- Body paragraph 1
 - Topic sentence (introduce paragraph topic)
 - Concrete detail (quote, data, stat, idea, etc. USE CITATION.)
 - Explanation (why is your concrete detail important for your topic?)
 - Transition (don't just jump into the next topic, tie them together with this sentence between paragraphs)
- Body Paragraph 2
 - Exactly like body paragraph 1 and you can use it as many times as you need to prove your point
- Conclusion
 - Creative
 - Updated scenario OR
 - Fixed scenario (very subjective. Think of it as using the information talked about in the body paragraphs to fix the scenario in the beginning)
 - Analytical
 - Mirroring analytical introduction (please read the section on my website about this one. Conclusions are super hard. I'm not the best at them.)

I left this outline brief and uninformative simply so that you would have to suffer through reading my article about how to use the basic bitch essay outline.